Lightroom is better maintainable. No longer do I have to lean out the photo showing all layers and guides to the side of the image. Now they are all on the image and there is no more filtering out the layers and guides.

There are times when the content area is left way off to the side and it looks odd. In LR 5.2 this has decreased. Also did a lot of clicking around to find the good grid settings. Very irritating! In 5.2 this seems to be less of a problem.

There are some issues with vector editing that I am calling a bug. In 5.2, the first line tool is not lining up with the item on the line up. It is offset more than when I first used the lines tool in LR 4.3. I would use this tool in quite a few places but it just does not line up. I know it is being used heavily so maybe it just needs a little tuning for this version?

Compatibility seems to be improving. There are very few changes in RGB mode (the only mode that makes sense, for me). It is still one of my favorites.

I played around a lot with the Content Aware tool. But there are some issues with it. Sometimes it is "stuck" on the area it thinks it can recognize.

There is one filter tool that has issues with content. Very annoying.

There are some improvements. Fewer glitches.

It is still one of the best photo manipulation apps on the market. I've been using the Leaf into for the past 8 months or so and after this update it feels more like a tool built for the iPad Pro than something that's now got a far more 'computerized' approach to it. The ability to write in text directly on the image, no longer needing my external keyboard or a USB port is great and the iPad Pro makes it very easy. I'm a fluid sketcher and the iPad Pro has a very fast wireless connection and rich stylus, so it's perfect for this. A new feature I like is being able to scroll directly beneath the edit tool you're using, so you can know exactly where that photo is on the canvas. I also find the colour settings and painting real areas much quicker than the Canary app.

• • Organic: The more you push and pull the sliders, the more neutral the overall appearance of the image. Use this technique to instantly create a natural look. As the more powerful software, Photoshop could meet all the artistic needs of most photographers. As you may notice, the more popular software tends to be more powerful, and there's no need to upgrade your computers. They are very powerful. There is a downside though. Photoshop tends to be a resource hog, and it will eat a lot of your RAM and CPU processing power. So if you have Photoshop, you'll need a powerful computer. If so, then a minimum of 16GB of RAM is advisable. Most computers nowadays come with at least 8GB of RAM which is sufficient. The one nice thing about RAM unlike a processor is that you can replace the RAM and add more after purchasing it. However, make sure to check this as again, companies like Apple have made it impossible to replace the RAM in their computers. It is always worth double checking! 933d7f57e6
