Intuitive interface lets you quickly adapt The application is pretty polished, at least when it comes to visuals. Running it brings up a menu that lets you choose between two different methods of searching and grabbing emails and phone numbers by snooping through content of a website you provide or based on search engines. Helpful descriptions are displayed when hovering the mouse cursor over them so you get an idea which best fits your needs. Both are similar in design and setup terms, which comes in handy by reducing the time needed to accommodate. Various prompts let you know if conditions can be enhanced and you're given the chance to perform various tweaks in this regard. Easy setup and thorough results All websites you look through are stored in a projects folder, with an incredibly easy setup process. You need to insert the target URL, with this being enough, but you can also take the time to add more details. If you're performing local search, there's a field dedicated to the domain, values can be modified to increase or decrease read timeout and thread count, as well as custom lists to include or exclude specific emails or URLs. Performing the operation based on search engines takes you through a similar setup process, but you can tweak a few more details. Various popular services are already at your fingertips, with options to add custom ones. The process runs on a specific keyword and you can also add filters for a refined search. Results are cleverly stored in a table along with details like company name, website, progress, emails, phone and Fax numbers. The list gets updated in real time, with the possibility to stop the process if you considered enough details are gathered. When done, export options let you generate either a TXT or XLS file with corresponding settings for info fields to be saved. Click to expand... OS: Win7 Version: 8.3.0.0 Platform: x86 / x64 File size: 5.3 MB After testing numerous applications from various developers, I found an alternative for my needs. This application helped me to extract emails and phone numbers from popular websites, gather them in a single place and even allow me to create a list of emails and phone numbers to send through a single
