If you get a bunch of rappers that all have good names, you get an A$AP Mob joint... In order to stay on the top 10 of any lists for five years straight, you probably have to make at least one mixtape that's.

Q: Angular 8 - Selecting an item in a list using an Id not working I have an list of items inside a list. I am attempting to select a specific item using a selectedId value from the parent list. I want to apply a certain class to the parent list item. Parent list items are defined like so: The product variable is defined in another component which is a child of the parent list component. I am using `this.products.selectedId` to get the id of the item. I also tried `this.products[product.selectedId]` which also works. But when I attempt to get the id like this, `product: any = this.products.selectedId`; it simply returns undefined and does not apply the class. What am I doing wrong? A: You should use `attr()` or `get()` function to access the attribute value in HTML, and use bracket notation `[attr] = "value"` in TypeScript to assign the value. This works in both HTML and TypeScript. I recommend using bracket notation, which is the more recommended option. `product: any = this.products[product.id]`; FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION
