HRT increases insulin sensitivity of healthy normoglycemic subjects: a prospective randomized study. In the HRT trial we have previously shown that postmenopausal women with insulin resistance, treated with conjugated equine estrogens (CEE) for 1 yr, responded with increased insulin sensitivity. If CEE is given to healthy normoglycemic women for a longer period of time, and it is possible that this effect might also be seen in healthy women, men, or older women, e.g., postmenopausal women. In this open-label, multicenter, randomized study, we have given CEE (2.5 mg/d orally) or tibolone (2.5 mg/d orally) or placebo for 6 months to 120 healthy, normoglycemic women. At baseline and after 6 months, euglycemic clamps were performed to measure insulin sensitivity in these women. Fasting glucose and lipid concentrations remained unchanged. Insulin sensitivity increased in all subjects who had been given CEE or tibolone, but there was no change in the placebo group. The increase in insulin sensitivity in the CEE group was due to the increase in the glucose infusion

A: After few Googling I found this from there I was able to understand that I can get 24 hour format with `$scope.time = moment.tz("24hours", { zone(false) : "+5:30", zoneAbbr : "+5" });` and then use `format()` `$scope.formatTime = function(time) { if (time.isValid()) { return`

Beta-lactamase production by Streptococcus pneumoniae isolated from the oropharynx. 1. The production of penicillinase and cephalosporinase was studied in strains of Streptococcus pneumoniae isolated from the oropharynx of 91 healthy adults over a seven-year period. 2. On examination of the relationship between host status and the production of beta-lactamases, and on statistical analysis, no significant correlation was found between the production of penicillinase, cephalosporinase or both and host status. 3. The production of penicillinase and cephalosporinase was examined in 63 strains of beta-lactamase-producing S. pneumoniae, compared with corresponding beta-lactamase-non-producing strains. 4.

All beta-lactamase-non-producing strains showed inhibited growth on agar medium containing penicillin and cephalosporin. 5. In beta-lactamase-producing strains, both penicillin and cephalosporin inhibited growth. 6. A 2-fold increase in the production of beta-lactamase activity was observed between penicillin (0.3 microgram ml<sup>-1</sup>) and cephalosporin (3.0 micrograms ml<sup>-1</sup>) concentrations. 7. These results indicate that the beta-lactamase concentration is not limiting for growth in antibiotic concentrations that inhibit growth in beta-lactamase-producing strains of S. pneumoniae.Q:
