In this article, you'll learn how to use Photoshop to create and edit raster images. The Basics You'll need a copy of Photoshop to work on your images. Photoshop is available for $79.99, Adobe Lightroom is available for $49.99, and the rest of the Adobe Creative Cloud is $44.99 per month for access to all of Adobe's creative and illustrative tools. This all-in-one package is a great option if you are interested in all of these tools, such as: All of the above programs will open your raster images, allowing you to edit them. Adobe Photoshop CC is a powerful image editing program that can be used to fix problems with your photos as well as produce incredible results. Photoshop has many tools to use when editing raster images. You need to learn some basics before you can get to the tools, and you'll see why below. Open the image you want to edit by going to File | Open. If you want to edit only one file, make sure that the file is the active image (the one that has the most attention on it) by going to Window | Arrange | Active Screen. If you're using Lightroom, you should get a notice in the file browser that the image is on-screen for editing. Photoshop will open the image as a layer, with the previous layers hidden by default. Go to Window | Arrange | Layer or you can use the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+T to make the layer active. The image will open as a single layer, with the previous layers hidden (they're shown as an asterisk next to each layer). You can undo a step or change the layer order by going to Layer | Lower | Raise or by pressing Ctrl+Z. Pressing Ctrl+Z again redoes the last change and will replace the layers in the order they were added. This is a common step in any image editing program so you won't have much trouble with it. You can go back to a specific layer or part of an image by going to Layer | Layer Mask | Ungroup or by pressing Ctrl+J. You can choose a different layer to edit by clicking its thumbnail; when you do this, it will be set to become the active layer and all of its layers will be visible. When you make a layer active, Photoshop automatically creates a

The subject invention relates to a process for the conversion of olefins, in particular propylene and ethylene, to aromatic hydrocarbons. In another aspect, the invention relates to a catalytic process for the conversion of olefins to aromatics. In still another aspect, the invention relates to a process for the separation of aromatics from olefins in a liquid hydrocarbon stream. Aromatic compounds are an important commodity chemical. They have numerous applications, including uses as intermediates for the production of many other important chemical products. Aromatic compounds are typically produced by selective hydrogenation of the corresponding alkylaromatic compounds. The most widely used method for selective hydrogenation is a process that uses metals on a supported catalyst, such as the Raney nickel or Pd/C catalyst. Selectivity for aromatic compound production over propylene to xylenes requires that the reduction of both olefinic and acetylenic components be minimized. Any reaction that reduces the ethylene content of a feed stream is highly desired because this can reduce the catalyst and hydrogenation recycle pressure that must be used. In addition to ethylene, a catalyst that selectively produces aromatics from olefins would preferably not reduce other alkene or acetylenic components. Catalysts are also used in aromatics separation processes. Since the separation of aromatics from gasoline boiling point products is usually accomplished by distillation, the most common commercial use of catalytic separation is the dealkylation of aromatic compounds. This type of separation is highly desirable in the production of pure xylenes or to recover components that are lost when gasoline is distilled to recover benzene and other aromatics. Aromatics separation catalysts typically comprise a zeolite, such as ZSM-5, a large pore molecular sieve that has a pore diameter greater than about 5.ANG., and preferably between about 7.4 and 10.ANG. and a platinum metal. Typically, the use of catalytic hydrogenation and selective separation is limited because the processes are typically carried out separately. Olefins that are refractory to one type of reaction are often more reactive in the other. In addition, hydrogenation using supported catalysts tends to be fouling and catalyst poisoning. Aromatic compound-selective processes tend to create large amounts of hydrogen gas that must be eliminated or recycled. It is also difficult to separate the aromatics from the hydrogen. A process that uses selective hydrogenation,

Focus on the Basics: Flea and Tick Essentials It's never too early to start working on prevention, and prevention is easier with great products! Another important year in the mobile pet world is coming up soon, meaning greater awareness of flea and tick activity. Preventing and controlling fleas and ticks is never too early to start working on, and prevention is easier with great products! Fleas and ticks are known to be a problem for some pets, particularly dogs and cats, in the Orlando, Florida area and across the Southeast. As the weather gets warmer and the weather becomes more humid, flea and tick activity is higher. Proper use of flea and tick products is very important to keep your pet healthy and to avoid getting fleas and ticks! There are a variety of products on the market to help your pet stay flea and tick free. The Anti-Tick and Flea Cozy Pillow & Stuffers® are designed to help control flea and tick activity on pets. There are also banded tick collars that have a "tick-off" property that should help control the number of ticks a dog or cat will pick up, as ticks secrete a substance that attaches itself to a dog or cat's hair, fur, or skin. Deet (DEET) and other tick and flea spray products are also widely available and can be used as a preventative, making it easier to see any drops of the spray. If you have fleas on your pet, you can use a topical spot-on product that works for your pet. Most topical spot-on products are applied every 3 to 4 weeks, and the active ingredients are designed to kill fleas and repel them for at least 2 to 3 weeks. Make sure that you buy your spot-on product in a store where you trust the product, and use caution when administering the product to make sure you don't end up harming your pet. To help control fleas on your pet, look for a product that contains both an active ingredient that prevents fleas and an active ingredient that kills the fleas that your pet already has. If you see your pet bitten by a flea, you can crush the flea to put a topical spot-on product on the bite.
