A-A .Q: How to force exception to be thrown I want to do something like: public static void main(String[] args) { try { throw new Exception(); } catch (Exception e) { System.out.println("Exception Thrown"); } } I am doing this because I would like to test if the default exception handling is working fine. I also want to be able to do something like this. public static void main(String[] args) { try { something(); } catch (Exception e) { System.out.println("Error: " + e); } } I do not want to just try and then catch the exception, I want something to actually throw the exception. I am wanting to do this to try and see if the JVM's default error handling is working. A: The easiest way is to replace a try-catch block with a throw statement. public static void main(String[] args) throws Exception { try { something(); } catch (Exception e) {
