The game features many, returning characters and weapons from previous games in the series, most notably Wei Shen, now dressed in a Hong Kong Police uniform, utilizing his Kung Fu abilities to deal with the Triad's crimes, as well as investigating corruption within the Hong Kong Police Force. Los Santos has been drastically remodelled in comparison to San Andreas, and is open to exploration with a huge variety of vehicles, including bicycles, motorcycles, boats, and automobiles, many of which are available to purchase from a series of garages in the city, with the majority of vehicles sold by non-specific "dealerships" that deal only in selling their cars to the player. This element of real-life real estate was also adopted from Grand Theft Auto IV, with the residences of Carl Johnson and Franklin Clinton being visible in the game. New stores include the "Van der Linde", a well-known desert survivalist based in the game's Nevada setting, and the "Mayflower Hotel", an upscale and luxurious hotel in the game's San Francisco setting. Non-playable characters, or NPCs, also possess a significant effect on the story of Sleeping Dogs, with the majority of the game's major story arcs involving a certain NPC, and the game's ending involving the outcome of the player's character's relationship with one of these NPCs. The main story of the game progresses with three possible endings, depending on the relationships the player chooses to pursue with these NPCs. A supporting plot thread featured in the game's multiplayer mode, known as "Black Mask" mode, is the rise of a mysterious international spy network that rules the city, and the protagonist's involvement in this plot, while not directly affecting the main story of the main character.
