An I.C. device employs a number of metal contact pads that serve as a medium for inputting and outputting data and control signals to the semiconductor devices of the I.C. device. Typically, the metal contact pads are made from aluminum or an aluminum alloy, such as aluminum-silicon, aluminum-copper, or aluminum-silicon-copper. The metal contact pads include a sputter-deposited barrier layer or a diffusion barrier layer to protect the aluminum from the environment, and an adherent layer to provide a bondable surface for forming the metal contact pad to the semiconductor device. The barrier layers are typically formed from one of the following materials: titanium, titanium nitride, tantalum, tantalum nitride, tungsten, tungsten nitride, and molybdenum. The barrier layers are formed on a surface of the semiconductor device by a physical vapor deposition (PVD) process such as sputtering or evaporation, or a chemical vapor deposition (CVD) process such as plasma-enhanced chemical vapor
