MouseTool Features: · Simple interface · Support Multiple Mouse · Manage Mouse Number · Manage Mouse in other way like · MouseTool has embedded Google Talk client · How to install MouseTool in Computer? · How to use MouseTool? · Download MouseToolThe New York Times today announced that it had acquired the Blogger service, which is known for its ease of use and cheapness. The deal was done for an undisclosed sum of money, which is presumably good news for Google because it's doing so well in the non-search market that it can now afford to be a step ahead of everybody else. The one problem: You can't create a new Blogger blog unless you have a gmail account. The Blogger team will continue to develop and operate the service, in close cooperation with Google, and we will continue to be a completely separate, independent company and not be a part of Google. But we will begin to work together to make Blogger even better for you and your readers. And then last night, I had an email from someone who said, "I had a Blogger blog with my real name. I changed it to a fake name when I signed up for Blogger. Now Google has asked for my real name and I don't know how I can answer that." People who have to create new blogs will use "mywebsite.com" as the name. It doesn't say anything about whether it's your real name or not. If it's your real name, the only thing to worry about is the dreaded "Real Name Policy". The new Blogger's real name policy has no such thing. However, it does have a requirement that you not use a name that may be misleading. This means that you can't have a site for a person who only posts to that site about Jingoism. You can see how this could get ugly if a real person starts up a Blogger blog and then is told that they must get a name other than their real one. A woman named "Sue" who only posts on her Blog
