Human parvovirus B19 infection has been associated with thrombocytopenia, and several reports have suggested a possible relationship with the development of idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP). We report here two patients with ITP and B19 infection, one with a fulminant presentation and the other with a relapsing course. Both patients responded to immunosuppressive treatment and viral clearance. The first patient had negative anti-human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) antibody tests. However, both B19 IgM and IgG antibodies were positive in his serum. Although B19 DNA was not detected in the patient's bone marrow, we assume that B19 virus infected the bone marrow of the patient. Our data suggest that B19 virus could be associated with ITP in some cases and that B19 infection may play a pathogenetic role in ITP.
